Book by Mary Attenborough and Michael Gallagher "Unbroken" launched in Gortahork

Mary Attenborough and Michael Gallagher's book launched on the 4th July in Óstan Loch Altan Gortahork was an unmissable occasion. The book titled "Unbroken" tells the story of Michael's arrest in 1996 and imprisonment in an English prison. The book details the full story of how Mary a born and bred English woman and author of two third level engineering mathematics text books scrutinised so-called evidence with a fine toothcomb. She could have walked away and taken another direction in life, but gallantly stuck by her man through thick and thin to this day. The book's secrets, lies & enduring love, is so well written that once you start reading you will not leave it down unless the fire brigade raps your door informing you that your house is on fire. Performing the launch was Pearse Doherty Sinn Fein's finance spokesperson. As one of the most impressive TDs and speakers in the Dail, his tribute speech to the book's authors was without fault. If you did not get a book on launch night you can pick one up in any recognised bookshop countrywide.

Pictured with Michael are fellow Republicans are Joe Ó Connel and Hughie (doc) Doherty all of whom experienced the reality of being Irish inside British prison walls.
